Manager's comments

- Emerging markets rose over the month, outperforming global equities and Asia Pacific equities.
- Markets were driven higher by the return of risk appetite as concerns about sovereign creditworthiness subsided.
- On the negative side, Marico (India: Consumer Staples) underperformed as it was viewed as fully valued in the short-term.
- Shoprite (South Africa: Consumer Staples) outperformed as consumer companies were increasingly favoured.
- Over the month we bought SP Setia (Malaysia) because of the company's growing exposure to 'eco-housing.'
- We sold AngloGold Ashanti (South Africa: Materials) as we lost conviction on their environmental performance in South America.
- The fund has significant holdings in companies with exposure to clean energy and energy efficiency.
- It is clear that many developing countries will be unable to follow the traditional development path pursued by industrialised nations in the past and we expect significant investment opportunities to result.

Important Information / Risk Factors:

Past performance is not a guide to future performance, and investment markets and conditions can change rapidly. If your fund invests in equity markets, it will be more volatile than an investment in cash or fixed deposits. The value of your investment may go down as well as up. There is no guarantee you will get back the amount invested. If your fund invests in overseas markets, currency movements may affect both the income received and the capital value of your investment. If it invests in the shares of small companies, in emerging markets, or in a single country or sector, it may be less liquid and more volatile than a broadly diversified fund investing in developed equity markets. This fund should be considered a long-term investment. You should read the fund's Prospectus before investing, including in particular the sections on the risk factors applicable to any investment. The views expressed herein should not be relied upon when making investment decisions.
